

Macro Roundup Article

Headline: How Republicans Can Get Serious on Spending

Article Link: <https://thedispatch.com/article/how-republicans-can-get-serious-on-spending/>

Author(s)	Brian Riedl
Publication	The Dispatch
Publication Date	January 23, 2023

Tweet: @Brian_Riedl offers practical suggestions on how Republicans could permanently stabilize the American debt at 95% of GDP, a goal that would start with running deficits at 3% of GDP relative to the current baseline of 6% over the next decade.

Summary: Fiscal conservatives should aim to permanently stabilize the debt at 95 percent of GDP. This goal would mean keeping deficits near 3 percent of GDP, compared to the baseline deficits rising past 6 percent of GDP over the next decade and 11 percent of GDP in three decades. In the short run, this means: Freezing annual discretionary appropriations. Building momentum for mandatory spending reforms with a modest package of savings (perhaps $400 billion over the decade) that address lower-hanging fruit such as leftover pandemic spending, program overpayments, and federal spending benefits for upper-income families. Begin working toward Social Security and Medicare reform—which drive nearly 100 percent of long-term deficits—by building bipartisan working groups behind the scenes.

Primary Topic: Government Spending

Topics: Database, Fiscal Deficits, Fiscal Policy, Government Spending, Op-Ed/Blog Post, Politics

Permalink: https://www.edwardconard.com/macro-roundup/brian_riedl-offers-practical-suggestions-on-how-republicans-could-permanently-stabilize-the-american-debt-at-95-of-gdp-a-goal-that-would-start-with-running-deficits-at-3-of-gdp-relative-to-the-curr?view=detail

Featured Image

Link: <https://www.edwardconard.com/wp-content/uploads/2023/01/Riedel-GOP-image.jpg>