Tweet: Torsten Slok @apolloglobal notes the credit crunch will have a meaningful economic impact as small banks are responsible for 40% of lending.

Summary: Bank credit conditions are tightening, and the negative impact on the economy from the ongoing banking crisis is going to be significant because small banks account for 30% of assets in the banking sector and 40% of lending, and small banks are facing three headwinds from 1) higher funding costs, 2) lower asset prices because of higher interest rates, and 3) more regulatory scrutiny.
