Tweet: A @BudgetHawks analysis notes the Social Security "trust fund" will deplete its reserves by 2033, triggering a 21% benefit cut under current law. A 27% (i.e. 3.3pp) payroll tax increase could close the funding gap.

Summary: Social Security is approaching insolvency. Under current law, Social Security cannot guarantee full benefits to current retirees. The Trustees project the Social Security Old-Age and Survivors Insurance (OASI) trust fund will deplete its reserves by 2033, when today's 58-year-olds reach the full retirement age and today's youngest retirees turn 71. Upon insolvency, all beneficiaries will face a 21 percent across-the-board benefit cut. Including the Disability Insurance (SSDI) trust fund, the theoretically combined trust funds will be insolvent by 2035 and beneficiaries would face a 17 percent cut. According to the Trustees, lawmakers could restore 75-year solvency with the equivalent of a 27% (3.3 percentage point) payroll tax increase, a 21% reduction in all benefits, or a 25% reduction in benefits for new beneficiaries if they act today.
