Tweet: When the race was Biden-Trump, women aged 18-29 favored Biden by 28pp while their male peers favored Trump by 11pp, a 39pp gender gap. That gap has risen to 51pp, with young women preferring Harris by 38pp and men favoring Trump by 13pp.

Summary: When President Biden was still in the race, men ages 18 to 29 favored Mr. Trump by an average of 11 percentage points, while young women favored Mr. Biden by 28 points, according to four national New York Times/Siena College polls conducted from last December to June. That was a 39-point gender gap — far exceeding that of any older generation. In Times/Siena polls of six swing states this month — taken after Ms. Harris became the presumptive Democratic nominee — young men favored Mr. Trump by 13 points, while young women favored Ms. Harris by 38 points, a 51-point gap. Mr. Trump's message has been particularly resonant for young men without college degrees and young men of color. Among men under 30 who voted for Mr. Biden in 2020, those who were sticking with him in swing-state polls in May were more likely to be white and have college degrees than those shifting to Mr. Trump.
