Tweet: 45% of Americans (23mm) aged 18-29 are living with their families, the highest rate since the 1940s.

Summary: Almost 90% of surveyed Americans say people shouldn't be judged for moving back home, according to Harris Poll in an exclusive survey for Bloomberg News. It's seen as a pragmatic way to get ahead, the survey of 4,106 adults in August showed. Covid-19 lockdowns in 2020 drove the share of young adults living with parents or grandparents to nearly 50%, a record high. These days, about 23 million, or 45%, of all Americans ages 18 to 29 are living with family, roughly the same level as the 1940s, a time when women were more likely to remain at home until marriage and men too were lingering on family farms in the aftermath of the Great Depression.
