Tweet: In the most recent New York Times/Siena poll, Biden's margin over Trump among Hispanics is 9pp, down from 23pp in 2020. Ruy Teixeira @AEI notes that Biden leads by just 1pp among working-class Hispanics who make up 78% of Hispanic voters.

Summary: The simple fact of the matter is that there are far, far more working-class than college-educated Hispanics. According to States of Change data, Hispanic eligible voters nationwide are 78% working class. And working-class levels among Latinos are even higher in critical states like Arizona (82%) and Nevada (85%). In terms of voting intentions, Biden leads by just one point among working-class Hispanics but by 39 points among their college-educated counterparts. Interesting, this 38-point reverse class gap is actually larger than the class gap in this poll among whites (30 points).
