Tweet: New survey data show a deep gender gap among registered voters aged 18-29: 60% of young women would vote for Biden if the election were held today, relative to 48% of young men. @dcoxpolls

Summary: At this stage in the campaign, Biden has a modest advantage among young Americans who are registered to vote. 54% of young voters say if the election were held today, they would support Biden, and 46% say they would support Trump. Young men and young women demonstrate starkly different vote preferences. 60% of young female voters say they are voting for Biden, compared to 40% who are backing Trump. Young men are more evenly divided: 52% are backing Trump, and 48% support Biden. 19% of young men say the country has gone too far in giving women equal rights with men, compared to 9% of young women. 60% of young women say the country has not gone far enough to address gender inequality, a view that only 37% of young men share. Notably, young men's views have changed significantly in the past few years. In 2017, less than half of today's number of young men 8% said the country had gone too far in ensuring women have equal rights with men.
