Tweet: Chinese exports of CNC machine tools to Russia have surged tenfold since the invasion of Ukraine in a demonstration of the relationship between industrial capacity and military power.

Summary: Chinese shipments to Russia of an important class of advanced machine tools have increased tenfold since the full-scale invasion of Ukraine, with the country's producers now dominating trade in high-precision "computer numerical control" devices vital to Moscow's military industries. Chinese-origin CNC devices made up 57% of Russian imports by value in July, up from just 12% before the war.
