

Macro Roundup Article

Headline: Can China Fix Youth Unemployment Woes With Military Recruitment Drive?

Article Link: <https://www.scmp.com/news/china/military/article/3225127/can-china-fix-youth-unemployment-woes-military-recruitment-drive>

Author(s)	Minnie Chan
Publication	South China Morning Post
Publication Date	June 27, 2023

Tweet: The Chinese military is drawing more heavily on recent high school and college graduates, in an effort to raise military capability and offset persistent youth unemployment. Recruiters are particularly targeting science and engineering talent. @SCMPNews

Summary: More than 90% of this year's recruitment to the Chinese military could be drawn from fresh graduates and high school students, in a bid to meet the People's Liberation Army's modernisation targets and ease the country's record youth unemployment. Analysts said that a drive to encourage educated young people to join the PLA was likely to have a twin purpose, with Beijing determined to achieve a world-class military by 2050 and more than 11 million graduates expected to swell the job market this year. The army is still finding it difficult to attract the country's most outstanding young people, according to Zhou Chenming, a researcher with the Beijing-based Yuan Wang military science and technology think tank "Compared with top public universities like Peking and Tsinghua, military academies are less attractive to outstanding high school students in first-tier cities like Beijing and Shanghai."

Related Articles: China Youth Jobless Rate Hits Record 20.8% in Challenge for Policymakers and Why Has Youth Unemployment Risen So Much in China?

Primary Topic: China

Topics: China, News article, Unemployment/Participation

Permalink: <https://www.edwardconard.com/macro-roundup/the-chinese-military-drawing-more-heavily-on-recent-high-school-and-college-graduates-in-an-effort-to-raise-military-capability-and-offset-persistent-youth-unemployment-recruiters-are-particularly?view=detail>