Tweet: The Biden administration “paused” the approval of new LNG licenses pending a new review process to account for climate change concerns, a move that will benefit foreign LNG producers.

Summary: The Biden administration halted the approval of new licenses to export US liquefied natural gas while it scrutinizes how the shipments affect climate change, the economy, and national security — a moratorium likely to disrupt plans for billions of dollars in projects. The pause could have implications for more than a dozen proposals now awaiting review at the Energy Department, including ventures planned in Louisiana by Commonwealth LNG and Energy Transfer LP.
