Tweet: . @paulkrugman argues last week's CPI release was "really, really good news." While both traditional core and wage core are elevated, fewer sectors are showing >10% inflation. @mtkonczal

Summary: Traditional core and wage core still suggest inflation running hotter than the Fed's 2 percent target, but not by all that much. Until mid-2022, inflation just kept getting more widespread, and you had to work ever harder to claim that at some fundamental level it wasn't that bad. If you want a broader view, Mike Konczal of the Roosevelt Institute has an incredibly cool graphic showing the distribution of price changes across the economy.
