Tweet: Polling suggests Biden now leads Trump among non-college Hispanics by only 2 points, down 17 points from his 2020 margin, with a group likely to represent 7% of the 2024 electorate. @NateMoore1287

Summary: Fresh data from the Survey Center on American Life offers a rare opportunity to split Hispanic voters by their education level—and what a split indeed. Biden leads Trump by 24 points with degree-holding Hispanics, but only by 2 points with non-college Hispanics. Trump is at 41% with the latter group, already outpacing his last performance. Biden, meanwhile, is at just 43%, seventeen points shy of his 2020 mark. 13% of working-class Hispanics remain undecided, well more than the 7% of college Hispanics or non-college whites. Non-college Latinos will represent about 7% of the 2024 electorate, considerably more than the 3% share of college-educated Latinos.
