Tweet: In a survey of registered voters, 56% of divorced men said they are voting for Trump relative to 42% of divorced women. This 14pp gap is significantly larger than the 5pp gap between married men and women and the 9pp gap for single voters. @dcoxpolls

Summary: 56% percent of men who are divorced said they are voting for Trump, compared to 42% of divorced women. The voting divide between men and women is larger among the formerly married than any other group. Married men and women report supporting Trump at remarkably similar rates (50% vs. 45%). Single men are somewhat more likely to vote for Trump than single women, a statistic that has been a topic of considerable comment.
