Tweet: Michael Cembalest argues that despite strong data in Q1/2 many longer horizon indicators are pointing to a slowdown. Excess savings should be down 60-70% by the end of the year. @jpmorgan

Summary: Despite strong US data in Q1 and Q2, the US still appears headed for a slowdown later this year. As shown above, many longer-horizon leading indicators point in that direction. Excess household savings are also being run down and should be 60%-70% depleted by the end of the year.
