Tweet: .@ernietedeschi @WhiteHouseCea argues that on the basis of "harmonized inflation" that uses the same consumer basket in all countries, the US now has the lowest 12-month inflation in the G7 advanced economies, both overall and by core.

Summary: Put simply, "harmonizing" means using the same consumer basket in all countries. The result is close to a truly apples-to-apples inflation concept that allows for international comparisons. Harmonized inflation generally rose and peaked earlier in the pandemic than the rest of the G7, measured on a 12-month basis. Though inflation remains elevated across all countries in this analysis, the U.S. now has the lowest 12-month harmonized inflation in the G7, both for overall and core inflation. That said, inflation going forward remains considerably uncertain across all G7 nations, including the U.S.
